Numb. 3723

The Daily Courant.

Friday, September 28 1713.

From the Brussels Gazette, dated Sept. 19.
Warsaw, August 28.

THE said Instant the King gave Audience to the Deputies of the Palatinate of Russia, who besought his Majesty to call a general Diet which might deliberate in what Manner to punish those who seek to involve the Kingdom in more Confusion and Calamity: At the same time they thanked the King for having conferred on M. Neilscheck the Office of great Marshal of the Crown, and recommended their Palatinate to his Royal Protection, that it may be exempted from the Contributions granted by the Republick, considering the indispensable Necessity it has been under of maintaining a long time the great Number of Troops quartered in it. To this the Chancellors of the Crown answered, that his Majesty had nothing more at Heart than the rendering vain the Intrigues fomented by the domestick Enemies of their native Country, and that he would condescend to call a general Diet at a proper Season, to the end the Republick might unite for the common Good of the Country. We learn, that M. Jablonowski Palatine of Russia, whom the King caused to be conveyed from hence in a Post Chaise to the Castle of Kohnstein in Saxony under a Guard of some Officers, arrived there in four Days, and that after he had passed by Perikau, a Party of 40 or 50 Horse came thither with Design to rescue him as he passed, but they came 24 Hours too late. We hear likewise, that the Persons who were seized by the King's Order at Danizick the Night between the 19th and 20th, are removed from thence under a strong Guard to Elbing, viz. the Wife of the Palatine of Kiovia, the Wife and Son of Shugielski, the Starost Poroski, M. Kitouski Steward of the said Palatine, M. Elerman his Inspector, M. Vlotouski Marshal of the Court to King Stanislaus, Captain Naroski, M. Czarkouski, M. Bounlouski, and M. Urbanowski Secretary of King Stanislaus.

Berlin, Sept. 9. The Saxon General Count Fleming is come to Potsdam to wait on his Prussian Majesty, to whom he has represented by Order from the King of Poland his Master, that he had certain Advice the Turks and Tartars design to penetrate into the Heart of Poland; and that by intercepted Correspondence was also discovered that if they succeed in that, they will advance to Saxony; and as that Invasion would cause a general Disturbance in the Empire, he desired his Prussian Majesty to send a considerable Body of his Troops to advance in Case of Need to the Oder, to guard that River; the like Request being made to the Emperour, for guarding well the Frontiers of Silesia.

From the Amst. Courant, dated Sept. 12.
Vienna, Aug. 26. Count Wackerbarth, Envoy of the King of Poland, solicited this Court to make good the Obligations of the Peace of Carlowitz, intimating that other wise great Mischiefs may ensue, the Tartars being ready to make an Invasion into Poland. He has been answered by our Ministers in general Terms, that his Imperial Majesty will act as the other Guaranties shall do; that the Case is yet doubtful; but that if the Turks, or Tartars do proceed to an open Rupture, this Court will consider what they ought to do, and will be ready in Concert with the other Guaranties to use such Means as are warranted by the said Treaty of Peace. They added, that they desired him the said Envoy to acquaint the King his Master, that he would have done well to assist the Empire more effectually than he, who is one of the most powerful Electors, has hitherto done; and not for carrying on a particular War in the North, neglect the common Cause so far as not to furnish his bare Quota of Men to the Army of the Empire, but to employ them in his own Service: So that the Emperour might be justified, should he now pay him, in his own Coin. The said Envoy appeared much concerned at this Answer, yet promised to represent it in the best Manner to his Master.

London, September 28. Yesterday arrived a Mail from Dunkirk.

From the Paris Letter, dated Sept. 22.

Paris, Sept. 22. A Courier from the Marshal de Villars who arrived there last Night, reports, that the Army commanded by that Marshal consisting of 250 Squadrons and 245 Battalions, passed the Rhine the 14th at Fort-Louis and at Fort-Beck, and encamped at Orlébourg. The Marshal de Belon has under his Command 100 Squadrons and 60 Battalions, besides the 15 which are in Landau. We know not yet what Design the Marshal de Villars has in View: But tis certain he has full Power from the King to act as he shall think fit. The King has given to Monsieur Meisner 10000 Livres, besides reimbursing him 20000 which he expended in his Ambassy at Utrecht.

London, September 18.
A Paragraph out of a Letter from Lisbon to
Mr. James Milner, dated Sept 3. 1713.

The Portuguese have lately made an Agreement for 100000 Yards of Cloth, to Cloath their Soldiery, which at 5 s. per Yard comes to 50000 l. but have engaged the Clothiers under severe Penalties that it shall not be English Cloth, but the Cloth of the Country, and the Linings also of the Manufactory of Portugal. This they have been put upon, finding no demand for their Wines, which no Body dares venture to buy, untill they see the decision of the Treaty of Commerce with France.

At a Meeting of several Citizens, it was agreed to put in Nomination the four following Gentlemen to represent the Honourable City of London, in the ensuing Parliament.
